

There were two teenagers in science class dissecting frogs and testing an unknown chemical, chemical X. Due to cross contamination, chemical X got mixed in with the frog's mucus. The solution started glowing, and in a panic, the teenagers threw it away with the dissected frogs. Overnight, the two dissected frogs came back to life and the mother laid her eggs in the pond next to a home.

Nearby, scientists discovered this weird but remarkably interesting green substance that was very gooey like slime. The scientists wanted to study it more, so they put it in a machine bottle with a sensitivity trigger. This was a safety precaution to destroy the substance if it became too toxic. Inside the lab, there was this sweet girl named Grace who would come to visit. Her parents worked as scientists there.

Grace loved to pick and capture frogs from her pond next door. One day, she went to the pond with a container for her searches, and as soon as she got there, she immediately saw this tadpole who was glowing. She was very confused and had never seen anything like it! She immediately picked up the tadpole to check it out, but as soon as she tried to touch it, she got tingled by the frog. It was as if she "activated" it. He grew fourteen times his size in two seconds, allowing him to hop away very quickly. She was so excited, she tried to chase the frog to get a closer look at him as he hopped away.

First, he was huge! The frog had these neon spots all over his body that were glowing. Before he was out of sight, he stuck out his cute very purple tongue. Grace finally headed home as it was getting dark. She did not want to tell her parents anything because not only do they dislike frogs, but she also didn't want them to experiment on him. This frog was an anomaly and needed to be protected.

Throughout the night in the woods next to her house, the frog had grown wings. He also had this incision mark on his chest that looks like it would open like a mouth. The next day, Grace went back to the pond in hopes of finding the frog. He was there! She brought some flies she caught as a snack. The frog instantly hopped to her whenever she came by.

Trouble struck the lab a few weeks later. The slime had become unstable and too toxic. Grace's parents were trying to hit the trigger so that the slime would be blown up, but it was jammed. The frog heard the alarms flying by, saw the gasses emitting from the machine bottle. He saw Grace was inside, so he dove in, grabbed the capsule with his strong legs and feet, threw it on his back and flew high in the sky. The frog kept going, finding out he could breathe in space.

The frog went up to Saturn. Discovering that the incision mark on his chest opened up, the frog exploded the machine bomb onto the ring. The released gases ended up creating a new planet. Exploding the capsule in space was the only option to save everyone from the toxicity. Grace named the frog "Kero", and when she misses him, she looks up at the new green world and thanks him for saving hers.